Boston Consulting Group (BCG), in their latest release, has shared insight on impact of COVID-19 on global trade and supply chain. In terms of global trade, the release acknowledges negative growth trend in future with reduction in total global trade volume from that of US$18 trillion in the year 2019. Recovery shall last till the year 2023 wherein the total trade volume is expected to resume to pre COVID-19 level; there shall however be substantial shifts across corridors. In order ride with the change, companies should act now to improve supply chain resilience; drive end-to-end visibility, streamline complexity, and implement shock absorbers. It is also critical to evaluate supply chain tradeoffs to rebalance priorities; secure access to resources, respond to demand shifts, and improve sustainability

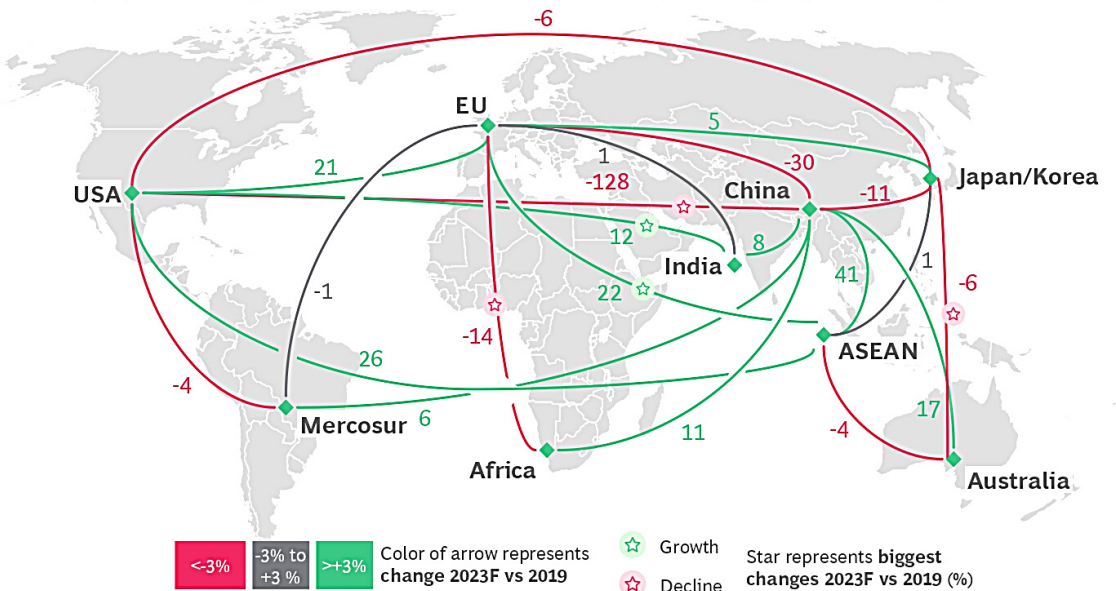

Total trade can potentially recover to previous level by 2023; however, with substantial shift in trade volumes across corridors
